Why is nearly every American's personal data on the Internet? Why is it important that you remove it today?

All I probably need is your first name - or last name - and the city you live in. Maybe I overheard it at the grocery store or coffee shop. Within minutes, in most cases, I can find your picture, full name, street address, address history, phone number, email, your child's school district and school, your workplace, your date of birth, your relative's names and association to you, your social security number, and every public document related to you. All within a few clicks. Maybe the info cost me $5, or maybe I pieced it together for free from a few "people search" sites - sites that sell your personal data to individuals and companies indiscriminately. From WhitePages.com to BeenVerified.com to MyLife.com - we stop it all.

I started PrivacyDuck.com in 2013 after being inspired with the goal of doing something truly unique - take my passion for privacy and blend it with my expertise in data removal - and create the world's first internet privacy company that truly removes your personal information, blocks it, and monitors for its reappearance - without compromising sensitive information, outsourcing the work, or taking risky technical shortcuts that expose your info to even more eyes.

After helping tens of thousands with their Internet Privacy, we've developed this easy-to-use, step-by-step guide to help you remove and monitor your data from the Internet. Take this information, use it, and begin deleting yourself from the internet of surveillance.
